CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

Financial statement is a process of examining relationship among financial statement elements and making comparisons with relevant information. It is a tool in decision making processes. Financial statement is defined as the process of identifying financial strength and weaknesses of the firm by properly establishing relationship between the items of the balance sheet and profit and loss account. There are various methods or techniques that are used in analyzing financial statement, such as comparative statements, schedule of changes in working capital, common size percentages, funds analysis, and trend analysis. Financial analysis of comparative statement is suitable and complex concept. Doing well may be measured by different standards.

Financial analysis refers to an assessment of the viability, stability and profitability of a business, sub-business or project. It is performed by professionals who prepare reports using comparative statement that make use of information taken from financial statement, and other reports. These reports are usually presented to management as one of their bases in making business decision.

- Continue or discontinue its main operation or part of its business
- Make or purchase certain material in the manufacture of its product;
- Acquire or rent/lease certain machineries and equipment in the production of its goods;
- Make decisions regarding investing or lending capital;

CONCLUSION:-

The study on Nanda enterprises was very interesting. This unit running under profit. Since it is the one among the manufacturing concerns in North canara. It has captured large range of customers. Hence there is ample opportunity for growth.

The financial position of the company is very good however there are some areas that require immediate attention. In the matter of financial analysis, the company has good performance.
